

Newsletter Transfiguration Sunday August 6, 2023

This year, the Feast of the Transfiguration falls on a Sunday. While we generally transfer feasts that occur on a Sunday to another open day in the following week, there are a few feasts that are so important that they take precedence over the usual Sunday lectionary. That's the case with the Transfiguration—the commemoration of the revelation of Jesus' glory on the mountaintop.

This Sunday, we'll wear white vestments and sing the great Transfiguration hymns. It may feel a bit like we've gone back in time to the winter, because the Transfiguration is also observed on the last Sunday after Epiphany each year. At that time, it serves as a culmination of all the events in which Jesus' identity as Son of God has been revealed. It is always a joyful way to mark the conclusion of that season as we prepare to enter into the more somber season of Lent.

On August 6, however, we remember the Transfiguration not because it ties together other themes in the lectionary, but simply because it is an incredible event of divine revelation which deserves to be celebrated. When that revelation came, the disciples wanted to build dwellings on the mountaintop—to make the experience last. And who could blame them? When we think about this story as we approach Lent, the message is often one of not being able to hang onto that glory forever, as we must follow Jesus down the mountain and on the path toward the cross. And that's still absolutely a message for us now! But I think of the feast of the Transfiguration as a way that we do get to dwell in the glory of that event, just for a little while.

It's summer. The daylight lingers until late in the evening. We enjoy rest, recreation, and a more peaceful pace of life. As we relish the light of the sun and the lightness of life in general, let's give thanks for the light of God's love, revealed in Jesus Christ. And let's commit to dwelling in that light all the time, even when the world feels dark.

Blessings,

Mother Terry+

Living After a Pandemic or Why We're All So Exhausted: The Church in a Time Crisis

It's often assumed the church and local congregations are in a crisis of resources. Congregations are losing people, money, and overall cultural influence. There is a misguided assumption that what ails the congregation is this loss of resources. The crisis the local congregation faces is not a loss of resources, but a loss of time which just keeps speeding up. And local congregations and denominations simply can't keep up with technology, social life and pace. Congregations can attend to sacred time in a late modernity of accelerating time, to move forward faithfully, and how denominations might find revitalization.

Ministry Inside the Immanent Frame: The Task of Speaking of God in a Secular Age

Congregational life isn't easy task in our time. Institutions are weaker, budgets are in decline, people are uninterested, and commitment is wavering. But these are only symptoms of a bigger issue that many congregations find themselves in an identity crisis. Examining what living in a secular age does to congregational identity and how pastors and lay leaders can find new footing within it.
